People with dementia often have other health problems and may receive uncoordinated care, leading to more hospital and emergency room visits. They may also show behavioral symptoms and often need 24/7 care.

The GUIDE Model Program will provide a 24/7 support line, as well as caregiver training, education, and support services. This program may help people with dementia stay in their homes longer by delaying or avoiding the need for nursing home care, improving the quality of life for them and their unpaid caregivers.

To reduce differences in dementia care, the GUIDE Model includes policies to ensure that underserved communities have equal access to the program's services.
